A series of dioxins with different toxicities to the terrestrial nematode Caenorhabditis elegans. A set of polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs), polychlorinated dibenzofurans (PCDFs), and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) was used to test the sensitivity of the nematode Caenorhabditis elegans to toxicants. The toxicity of the mixture of PCBs and PCDDs was found to be equivalent to that of 3,4,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin (TCDD). Moreover, the toxicity of the PCDDs increased in parallel with the increasing number of chlorine atoms at the ortho- and para-positions of the dioxin rings. The toxicity of the PCDDs was independent of the content of the penta- and hexa-chlorinated dioxin rings. These results indicate that these compounds are toxic in a similar manner to TCDD.

In modern times, the printing industry has developed a wide variety of techniques and apparatus for producing images, often printing an image onto a medium of some type, such as a sheet of paper or other media. As printers have become more compact, a wide variety of high quality images can be produced. However, the compactness of the printers may create difficulty in performing some printing techniques. One such printing technique is the inking of a printing surface. Inkjet printers, for example, have been used to deposit a printable medium with ink. The printing surface can have a series of parallel, spaced-apart lines or arrays. Each array of lines can define one pixel of a digital image. A series of parallel lines in a particular array can define a horizontal pixel line of an image. A series of parallel lines in a particular array can define a vertical pixel line of an image. The ink can be deposited as a series of dots or other shaped features. As the quality of printing continues to improve, the process of printing on an intermediate printing
