Coming soon to Xbox Live Marketplace and PlayStation Network. XBLA-ESRB: M PlayStation-ESRB: M "The original Homefront started with the idea that the Korean government had set aside this land because it was special to Americans. Its people had saved the country through the Korean War. The game's story surrounds a female Korean-American woman who returns home after the war and her struggle to raise her younger brother, who has to lead the uprising against the government. People differ on the political message of the game, but what's not in question is the beauty of the visuals or the power of the writing. The game and the ways the player can play it are a testament to the human spirit, which is so often abused by mankind, and represents it in a way no other game has or can. ## What's new in Citizens: Far Lands:

SPOILER ALERT: This is intended for players/GM of Dungeons and Dragons 5E and above. City of Ambitions Fantasy Grounds user Balduin came to me with this character race - the City of Ambitions. The city is an amalgamation of races and cultures. The City of Ambitions has found itself entangled with the same type of conflict as most human cities do - viz. animistic and pantheistic religions dominate the cities largest institutions. The city has also found itself embroiled in wars with drow and dragons, who are both pantheistic in nature. Also, as the city is made up of people of many different beliefs this has forced them to develop a system of government which is at the same time tolerant of any way of life, be it capitalist or socialist. In fact, the system is set in a quasi-capitalist economy in order to allow for expansion. However, the system does not label individuals as who they are, only the roles they perform as they exist in a pure hierarchy and different roles have different income and expenses or benefits including but not limited to; . One of the major problems of my city is how varied their race is. There is no easily identifiable in-group based on physical features. Rather, bonds and friendships form easily with any soldier, laborer, farmer or craftsman. This creates a musical culture that spans all races and sizes of humans. But, I am not displeased with this characteristic - it is the very essence of a large city. I have created a city full of diverse people trying to survive in a world made up of diverse people. Not only that, they are using technology to build complex societies which include industry. This unlocks a new set of threats, opportunities and resources. The city also has a natural environment. In my case, the city is on a large river - which many of the people eulogize as the "holy river". History: In the beginning of the world, which some say dates back eons, there was a very large island, some call it an oasis many call it Pandora. Anyways, the island was chaos. The lava that formed the island was often the ground to be swapped out with new life, new houses, and rulers. Yet, it was always resurfacing and always rebuilding. Everyone was unsure what was happening, or who was responsible. Many legends say that a spark, brought about by the
